The Impact of Social Media on Teenagers

Social media has become a significant part of teenagers' lives, shaping how they communicate, learn, and view themselves. Platforms like Instagram, TikTok, and Snapchat allow young people to connect with friends, share creative content, and follow trends. While these platforms offer benefits, parents and experts are concerned about their effects on mental health and self-esteem.

For 16-year-old Sarah from Zurich, social media is an important way to stay connected. She spends several hours a day on TikTok and Instagram, where she shares videos and follows influencers. "It's fun, and I love seeing what everyone else is doing," she says. However, Sarah admits that sometimes she feels pressure to look good online. "You see all these perfect pictures, and even though you know they're edited, it's hard not to compare yourself," she adds.

Studies show that Sarah's feelings are common. A recent survey found that 60% of teenagers feel pressured to present an ideal image of themselves on social media. This pressure can lead to anxiety and low self-esteem, especially when teenagers feel they can't measure up to the unrealistic standards they see online.

Another issue is the amount of time teenagers spend on social media, often late into the night. Many admit to checking their phones right before bed, which can lead to problems with their sleep. The blue light from screens affects the body's ability to relax, leading to poor sleep quality. Sleep experts recommend that teenagers turn off their phones at least an hour before bedtime to avoid these problems.

However, social media is not all bad. Many teenagers use platforms to follow global events and engage in activism. For example, 17-year-old Lukas from Geneva follows climate change discussions on Twitter. "It's a great way to stay informed and see what young people around the world are doing," he says. Social media allows teenagers to express their opinions and join conversations about important topics, such as the environment or social justice.

Parents and teachers are trying to help teenagers find a healthy balance. Some schools now offer lessons on digital well-being, teaching students how to use social media responsibly and avoid its negative effects. These lessons motivate young people to think critically about the content they see online and manage their screen time wisely.

In conclusion, while social media can offer connection and creativity, it's important for teenagers to use it in a balanced and healthy way.

 - A) ...spends too much time online.
 - B) ...sees modified pictures of content creators.
 - C) ...watches violent videos.
 - D) ...posts videos on Snapchat.

3. How many teenagers feel pressured to present an ideal image online?
 - A) ...a few teenagers
 - B) ...two thirds of teenagers
 - C) ...half of teenagers
 - D) ...most teenagers

4. Social media can negatively affect their health because...
 - A) ...it causes sleeping disorders.
 - B) ...it causes stress about school.
 - C) ...it causes eye problems.
 - D) ...it causes concentration problems.

5. What positive impact does social media have according to the text?
 - A) It improves teenagers' grades.
 - B) It helps teenagers think about important topics.
 - C) It boosts teenagers' confidence.
 - D) It helps teenagers relax.

6. Some schools now teach students...
 - A) ...to avoid using social media completely.
 - B) ...to follow more useful influencers.
 - C) ...to use social media carefully.

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE IN SCHOOL

C. New technology is changing the classroom

Technology has always played a role in education, but Artificial Intelligence (AI) is now taking it to a new level. From personalized learning programs to AI-powered tutors, the use of technology in the classroom is increasing rapidly.

One of the most significant impacts of AI in schools is the ability to personalize learning for each student. AI systems can analyse a student's progress and propose lessons to meet their individual needs. This means that students can learn at their own pace and focus on the areas where they need the most help.

AI isn't just helping students; it's also supporting teachers. Teachers can use AI tools to do administrative tasks, such as grading and participation, giving them more time to focus on teaching. Additionally, AI can provide teachers with insights into student performance, helping them identify students who may need extra support.

AI offers many benefits, but it also presents problems. Some educators worry that AI could replace teachers or reduce the human interaction that is so important in education. Another aspect is that students become overly dependent on technology.

Even if there are some challenges, many schools are interested in AI technology. From AI-driven language learning apps to virtual reality classrooms, schools are finding innovative ways to integrate AI into their teaching. These tools are helping to make learning more attractive and accessible for students around the world.

The use of AI in education isn't just about improving academic performance. AI can also help students develop important life skills. For example, AI systems can help students learn problem-solving and critical thinking skills, which are necessary in today's world.

As AI continues to grow, it will surely play an even greater role in education. Schools need to get used to these changes and make sure that both teachers and students are prepared for a future where AI is a central part of learning.
